NORWEGIAN GOOD FOR FLIGHTS TO NEW YORK

Simon says

SIMON CALDER

I am going to New York for a long weekend in August to see a friend who is performing in a play in Central Park. I hear that Norwegian has just started no-frills flights from Gatwick. Is it the cheapest flight I can get? – Name withheld, Southwark

NORWEGIAN started flying last week from Gatwick to New York JFK, on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays.

The fare for the middle weekend of August, going out on Thursday Aug 14 and back on Tuesday Aug 19, is £769. Add another £70 return for in-flight meals, advance seat reservation and one piece of checked-in baggage – total £839 – if you wish.

The alternatives are American, British Airways, Delta, United and Virgin Atlantic from Heathrow to either JFK or Newark (both equally easy, or difficult, in terms of access to Manhattan). On the same dates the cheapest I can find is around £940 return on Delta. It offers many more departure time options than Norwegian, but note that Norwegian flies the state-of-the-art Boeing 787 Dreamliner.

One more thought – if you can stretch your trip by a day and fancy a snapshot of Iceland, Icelandair can fly you from Gatwick (or, for a little more, Heathrow) on Thursday Aug 14. Stay just over 24 hours in Reykjavik then continue on to JFK. The stopover saves a small fortune on air passenger duty. With the outbound legs in premium economy (back in ordinary economy), Icelandair quotes £969.

I assume you will be able to stay with your friend; otherwise, it would be wise to book a flight and hotel together as a package. Not only would this save you money, it would also confer additional consumer protection in case anything goes awry.

GO WILD THIS SUMMER

DESTINATION NORWAY

NORWAY'S spectacular Svalbard archipelago in the polar north is populated by polar bears and Arctic foxes, along with myriad bird and marine life.

A new tour from Simply Sweden aims to highlight the remote region's natural wonders during the longer days of the midnight sun with boat and walking trips, mixing stays in characterful hotels, with nights in the capital Oslo and lively Tromsø.

Two nights are spent at the Isfjord Radio at Cape Linne on the Isfjord's southernmost tip, 80 km from Longyearbyen, the archipelago's main community and the northernmost town in the world. This 23-room historic radio station turned boutique hotel, reached by boat across Isfjorden in summer (by dog sled or snowmobile in winter), was established in 1933. Arctic-chic interiors hold blueish-grey hues, goatskin blankets and driftwood sculptures. For full immersion in the local culture, raw whale and reindeer and lentils are on the menu.

■ An eight-night Magic of the Arctic – Svalbard trip costs from £2,295pp B&B, based on two sharing, including return flights to Oslo and out of Tromsø, internal flights, airport transfers in Longyearbyen and Tromsø, some meals, and boat safari, simplysweden.co.uk
